

I would strongly urge the FCC to utilize stronger regulations against telemarketers, in the wake of the Consumer Bankers Association in their effort to have unrestricted access to tele-marketing calls made to past and present customers.

If I can hang a sign on my property that state: "No Trespassing" or "No Solicitation" then why can't I place an electronic warning associated with my phone services that also state: "No Solicitations Accepted". When I signed up for the No-Call List, I thought that was how the FCC was going to help me. Help me to keep telemarketers from invading my privacy. Any unwelcome phone call made to me is an invasion of my privacy.

Please consider the intent of the telemarketing law, and allow the public to remain free from any unwanted phone communication, whether it is from a banking institution, where I may have been a member 12 months ago, or the bank where I currently conduct my business today.

Thank you,

Robert Beckwith
